Designating ward boundaries solely on electoral numbers is flawed and should take into account the number of households because household size will vary from rural urban and town. In my ward of boughton aluph and eastwell I have circa 1200 households with an electoral roll circa 2.5k. This is entirely manageable for me with representing individual electors. Accept for minor adjustments the proposal to increase the number of Wards and create large doublewards will lead to difficulties for electors where members are of political difference. I believe if it isn't broke why fix. Recent stats say number of Councillors reduced by this exercise so why is Ashford bucking the trend. Look again and make adjustments where it is really broke. The key most important people is the electorate and it is what they say that really counts.
