

Keeping well during self-isolation

Support for older people

During unsettling times it's normal to experience difficult emotions like anxiety or worry. It's important while you stay indoors, that you have activities that will help you keep well.

Here are some helpful things to do:

Make a schedule

Keeping a routine can be a really useful way to stay active, and have control over your day. Think about writing up a timetable to put on the wall, and write out what activities you will do throughout the day. It's important to include things that will be enjoyable and/or calming, as well as productive.

Keeping healthy

Take care of your basic needs; get rest and eat healthily. Remember, exercise is good for your physical health, and it can also boost your mood. You can still go outside for one form of exercise, just remember to practice social distancing and keep 2 metres apart. You can also find creative ways to keep active, for example, circling your wrists and ankles when sitting down or having a stretch whilst looking out a window.

Screen time

There is a lot in the news and sometimes this information can be overwhelming. Think about how you use screen time, and avoid having the TV or radio in the background if what's on is upsetting. Instead, look for things you do enjoy, for example, if you like quizzes, find shows that have questions and pit your wits against the contestants. Maybe even phone a friend and watch together.

Finding calm

It may be useful to write down all the questions you have and look for the answers from reliable sources such as the NHS and Gov.uk.

Finding things that are comforting to us can also help with being calm and relaxed. You can find free phone apps and tools such as Calm which helps with relaxation. Other ways to stay calm around the house could be to sort through old photos and label them, taking up a hobby you used to enjoy or nurturing your plants.

A positive note

It's important to remember that there is hope and that people are getting together at this difficult time to support each other. End your day on a positive note, by spending a few minutes before bedtime to think about something positive that happened in the day – or something positive you hope will happen in future.

Staying connected

It's really important to keep in touch with friends and family members even when you can't meet face-to-face so think about scheduling phone time. If you find that the Coronavirus is the main topic of conversation at the moment, think about a list of other topics you want to talk about – such as a new activity you've tried at home or a new relaxation tip you've learnt.

Do things together

If you live with other people who aren't self-isolating it can be fun to involve others – such as finding great recipes together, reading books out loud, meditation or joining in an online dance class.
