The Concept of Boundary Reviews is in many ways ridiculous. We still use an outdated electoral system which makes the drawing of lines more important than the way people vote. A proper STV multi-member election would negate this to a certain degree - but of course national govt would need to legislate for this. Given the constraints that you are placed under - Oxford has a fairly good system of up by halves every two years. Which seems sensible to continue. The boundaries seem sensible. I couldn't tell from the map whether the New Development at Barton Park (off Waynefleet Road actually comes under "Barton and Sandhills" or is outside of Oxford city council altogether? I had considered buying one of the new build properties there and it was unclear which council district area it came under.
