I question the value/cost/benefit of parish councils. It seems they have remarkably little power or authority, and do not much more than act as a signpost referring issues to other agencies - principally West Berkshire. Greenham Parish Council have a precept approaching £90,000, having generated unspent reserves in excess of £80,000 through under spending in prior years. Based on the budget proposals for 2017-18, if it were not for the Control Tower soaking up both current spend and reserves, it seems very probable that spending on activities to enhance parishioners well-being will continue to be far short of precept.
