The scope for effective change is hindered by the failure to consider parish level council boundaries at the same time. For instance, in the urban areas, it is becoming very clear that the creation of new parishes to significantly slim the larger ones (often designated towns) would make for a more economic and less confused state whilst enhancing democratic input with a truly localised voice. For instance, the parishes in West Common and Clay Hill could, with adjustment to adjoining ward boundaries, at parish level, have little in common with each other or indeed the Newbury Town wards. These parishes are populous enough to justify their own separate parish level council.
